A community health centre introduced a program offering regular blood pressure and blood glucose checks to adults at increased risk of chronic disease. Patients with abnormal results are referred to a physician for further assessment. The centre hopes that identifying problems at an early stage will reduce the number of patients who later require expensive hospital treatment.

What is the main goal of the preventive care program?

- a) To provide hospital treatment to every patient with a chronic disease.
- b) To identify health problems early and reduce the need for more costly treatment later.
- c) To replace physicians with community health workers.
- d) To limit health checks to patients who already have severe symptoms.

A private clinic transitioned from a “Fee-for-Service” model to a “Value-Based Care” approach. Under the old system, the clinic was paid based on the number of tests and procedures performed. Under the new model, payment is tied to patient health outcomes and the management of chronic diseases. The goal is to reward the quality of care rather than the quantity of services provided.

Why did the clinic change its payment model?

- a) To encourage doctors to perform as many tests as possible.
- b) To simplify the billing process for administrative staff.
- c) To prioritize patient health outcomes over the volume of services provided.
- d) To reduce the number of patients the clinic treats daily.
